This meeting is an excellent opportunity to give high visibility to your graduate program to an audience of active scholars, practitioners, advocates, and students professionally engaged with social problems such as crime, justice and punishment; environmental justice; gender inequality; global and economic inequality; labor issues; health care policy; immigration; institutional ethnography; justice concerns across the life course; LGBTQ issues and concerns; poverty, disadvantage and welfare; racism and anti-racism; disability rights, and social movements.

The meeting program containing an outline of over 800 presentations and other essential information will be distributed to each attendee and posted for one year on the frequently visited SSSP web site (http://www.sssp1.org).
