MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIR
CLARE CANNON
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA-DAVIS

Dear E&T Community,

We find ourselves yet again in extraordinary circumstances the world over. As COVID-19 continues to threaten the health and well-being of our friends, family, and communities, we are left to continue to persevere after almost two full years of pandemic life.

These are difficult times that continue to demand incredible daily responses to live our lives - to take care of our children and elders, to further our work advancing knowledge, teaching the next few generations, and upholding our institutions. It is exhausting. Many of us may find the latest crescendo bringing up old feelings of fear, anxiety, anger and resentment.

I know at the dawn of this new year, many of us are looking for a little ray of light, a little hope. And for me, this community, continues to provide, foster, and grow that hope. You all continued to do fascinating, important, world-defining work in the midst of so much loss and uncertainty. It is truly an honor to lead this division. I want to thank each of you for all you do and for all the support you provide this division and SSSP. We need each other more than ever. I hope to celebrate each of you and your many accomplishments in Los Angeles at our 2022 annual meeting.

Cheers,
Clare Cannon
MESSAGE FROM THE INCOMING CHAIR

LAUREN EASTWOOD
SUNY COLLEGE AT PLATTSBURGH

In looking for things about which to feel hopeful now at the start of 2022, it is difficult to avoid focusing on the challenges. Not only is there a great sense of pandemic fatigue, but the continued erosion of voting rights, women’s reproductive rights, confidence in evidence-based thinking—along with increasing evidence we’ve pushed our earth systems to the brink—to name just a few issues, all weigh heavily on me. However, perhaps there are glimmers of hope. The “great resignation” may mean that people are reevaluating their relationship to their work.

Hey! Even a couple of Starbucks were able to unionize! In the pessimistic fog within which I seem to find myself these days, I need to remind myself that such things cannot be dismissed as inconsequential.

On a personal level, I am very much looking forward to our annual meeting in Los Angeles this year. Since graduate school, SSSP has been an organization to which I’ve felt great affinity. I’m always inspired by the members, their work, and their commitment to social justice. While I’ve been a member of E&T for a long time, I’ve focused my engagement in the Institutional Ethnography Division. As a result, I haven’t gotten to know as many of the SSSP members with whom I share a substantive research focus. I’m excited about this opportunity to change that!

I look forward to seeing the sessions take shape as people submit abstracts, and to have both formal and informal conversations about the work that inspires us. I’m hoping that we can deploy the technology we’ve learned to use and perhaps have some periodic opportunities to “meet” over the course of the year, in addition to the annual meeting itself. If this is something that people think would be useful and interesting, please feel free to reach out!

Regardless, while I have experience in chairing a Division, I am excited about working with Clare as I learn more about E&T. I hope that E&T members feel comfortable reaching out with ideas and with interest in getting involved. SSSP has really provided such a gratifying space for me over the years, and I’m thrilled really get to know the people, the research, and the ideas that make E&T tick.

Sincerely,
Lauren Eastwood

How can we build a future of work that meets pressing challenges and delivers for workers? Contemporary societies are beset by interrelated ecological, political, and economic crises, from climate change to democratic erosion and economic instability. Uncertainty abounds about the sustainability of democratic capitalism. Yet mainstream debates on the evolution of work tend to remain narrowly circumscribed, exhibiting both technological and market determinism.

This volume presents a labor studies perspective on the future of work, arguing that revaluing work — the efforts and contributions of workers — is crucial to realizing the promises of democracy and improving sustainability. It emphasizes that collective political action, and the collective agency of workers in particular, is central to driving this agenda forward. Moreover, it maintains that reproductive work — labor efforts from care to education that sustain the reproduction of society — can function as a crucible of innovation for the valuation and governance of work more broadly.
